

Roadmap

Table of contents

Near term, the work is to take the first commercial product to stable revenue and keep the software foundations boring and reliable.

Medium term, the research track produces candidates that can become their own products within the one company, without disturbing the core and without creating separate legal entities.

Long term, the hardware venture becomes reachable. It is deliberately last. The software must be settled before we commit capital to silicon, displays, or the field operations that go with them.